Remembering Rose Mary

Oncology nursing and the Oncology Nursing Forum (ONF) lost a leader on February 21, 2011, with the passing of Rose Mary Carroll-Johnson, MN, RN. Rose Mary sat at the helm of ONF for 20 years. The imprint of her leadership is indelible. For many nurses, ONF has become the source for oncology nursing research, the foundation for evidence-based clinical practice.

I don’t remember a time as an oncology nurse without Rose Mary—as editor, author, mentor, friend. I came to oncology nursing as a second career and, as I was entering nursing school in 1991, Rose Mary was already launching a new endeavor in her own life, as editor of ONF. My introduction to being an author, reviewer, and editor came from Rose Mary. Her recognition of abilities I didn’t know I possessed gave me confidence to accept her challenges. Her quiet support inspired me.

Do you use nursing diagnoses in your documentation or research? If so, Rose Mary touched your professional life by helping develop and refine the standardized North American Nursing Diagnosis Association (NANDA) diagnoses. She served as editor of the official NANDA Journal, Nursing Diagnosis, from 1989–1994. When you open your electronic medical record (EMR) to document care on your patient, you see terminology that is common to most EMRs and institutions. You can thank Rose Mary’s expertise for giving you those understandable and standardized terms that make sense to nurses. She was editor of the International Journal of Nursing Terminologies and Classifications from 2000–2006. If your interests are focused on hospice or palliative care, you may belong to the Hospice and Palliative Care Nurses Association (HPNA). Rose Mary left her mark on HPNA, too. She served as editor of the Journal of Hospice and Palliative Nursing from 1998–2000.

Are you sensing a trend here? Rose Mary—whether she was the nurse working with you, mentor, researcher, editor of a journal that affected your professional practice, or friend—was there, at your side. When the news came that Rose Mary had lost her two-year battle with cancer, e-mails and phone calls flooded in. Condolences. Memories. Expressions of loss. I realized that Rose Mary’s reach was far wider than I could singularly report. And so, this editorial shares thoughts, remembrances, and anecdotes about Rose Mary. The themes emerged from the messages received.

Oncology Nursing Society

Rose Mary was a founding member of the Oncology Nursing Society (ONS) and went on to contribute time and expertise to the Society over the years. Paula Rieger, RN, MSN, CAE, FAAN, ONS chief executive officer, and Carlton Brown, RN, PhD, AOCN®, recalls serving with Rose Mary on the first ONS Steering Council in 1996: “I remember Rosie at all of the meetings. She was so pensive, quiet, reserved, a magnanimous listener . . . and then at the most opportune moment, Rosie would strike with pearls of wisdom. She would humble us all, bringing us back full circle, directing us to stay focused, and enabling us to maintain our course and establish clarity at a time when professional and personal relationships were rapidly changing.”

Editor and Author

Linda Sarna, DNSc, RN, FAAN, AOCN®, reminded us, “Rose Mary has over 80 publications listed on PubMed which include her insightful editorials as editor of ONF. She championed the role of the oncology advanced practice nurse and excellence in patient care, and her contributions changed the landscape of oncology nursing in this country and worldwide.” From Deborah K. Mayer, PhD, RN, AOCN®, FAAN: “I have known Rose Mary for the 20 years she was editor of the Forum, through many ONS activities, and with my own publications in her journal. I worked more closely with her when I assumed editorship of the Clinical
