Complementary and alternative therapies are more popular than ever. Patients seek out these treatments through the Internet, books, nontraditional healthcare providers, and nurses. Although nurses recognize that use of these therapies is common, clinicians, program planners, and patient educators who must respond to the growing interest among patients need current information about use, attitudes, and beliefs (Richardson, Sanders, Palmer, Greisinger, & Singletary, 2000).